

How do you determine your MBA ROI?

Continuing your education has a price tag up front, but how long will it take to recoup your costs?

Financial Success

Short-term/entry-level salary increases

Statistics show that many recent MBA grads see an immediate salary growth of $30,000 to $40,000 a year depending on whether they enrolled in a part-time or full-time MBA program.¹

Career-long salary projections

The benefits of earning an MBA continue long after graduation. Alumni from some universities, including Santa Clara University Leavey School of Business, report mid-career salaries that are double their early-career salaries.²

Career Mobility

At your current employer

People with MBAs and related graduate degrees in business report getting more promotions than others without an advanced degree.¹

With a new employer

Employers report that hiring candidates with MBAs is on the rise,³ and an MBA can qualify you for positions with greater responsibility, potentially doubling your current salary.⁴

1. Retrieved on March 18, 2019, from gmac.com/market-intelligence-and-research/market-research/alumni-perspectives-survey.aspx?WT.svl=HPC2014alumni

2. Retrieved on March 18, 2019, from poetsandquants.com/2018/01/29/the-highest-paid-mba-alumni/

3. Retrieved on March 18, 2019, from gmac.com/why-gmac/gmac-news/gmnews/2017/june-2017/companies-plan-to-hire-mba-graduates.aspx

4. Retrieved on March 18, 2019, from wsj.com/articles/looking-to-double-your-salary-try-an-m-b-a-1544187623